I am trying to run the following python script: import sys import gprolog import os def run(): gprolog.S = os.path.expanduser("/usr/lib/gprolog") gprolog.HOME = "/usr/local" gprolog.sysout = sys.stdout gprolog.quit() if __name__ == '__main__': run() But when I run gprolog like this, the output is "bash: gprolog: command not found". I am using the pre-built version from the pypi page (I have looked at the GNU linker help file ( for the option -lgprolog and it says that I need to use the -L and -l options, but I don't understand what those options mean. What do I do? How do I get my system to recognise the gprolog executable?

A: Your script is not a Python script, but bash script. The Python import is required and it's quite evident from the script name. The recommended approach is to use cprolog instead, which is part of standard Prolog distribution. Before we talk about on which phone we want Sprint to kill their unlimited plans, here's some quick thoughts on the data plans from the different carriers: AT&T: As of right now, they've got the best unlimited data plan of the three. Right now I'm paying $65 a month for the "5 lines" unlimited plan. Out of the three phones, I think the iPhone 4S is the most attractive because it costs much less upfront. I think it will be very difficult b7e8fdf5c8
